Stouffville woman awarded damages in SLAPP case
A woman who was the subject of a libel lawsuit based on comments she made in two Facebook groups about a potential environmental issue has been awarded $1,500 in damages by an Ontario Superior Court judge.

Divisional Court reaffirms cutting lawyer's fees by $700K
Law Times
The Divisional Court has reinstated an assessment officer's decision to cut more than $1 million in legal fees down to $323,000, because the lawyer who charged the fees failed to provide evidence to support his billings.

Collaborative practice comes into its own
Canadian Lawyer
Many family law disputes are better resolved with a team in a non-adversarial setting, and more lawyers are offering this kind of help.

Quebec judges sue government over court's exclusive jurisdiction
Legal Fees
A group of senior Quebec Superior Court judges are suing the provincial government over the exclusive jurisdiction of the Court of Quebec in some civil matters.

Expert evidence faces greater scrutiny by the courts
The detailed attention and careful ruling given early in December by Justice Robert Stack of the Supreme Court of Newfoundland and Labrador to the admissibility of an expert report highlights a year in which issues surrounding expert evidence took centre stage in Canadian courts.

Top 10 business decisions of 2015
In a less than stellar year for business, only the decisions relating to privilege, certification and leave can be seen as decidedly positive in our Top Ten Cases of 2015 list. Canada's courts delivered body blows to several other issues.

Copyright in a YouTube world
In the world of YouTube and online video content where claimants will often send automated Digital Millennium Copyright Act notices, parties may need to demonstrate that fair use was considered before a notice is sent, writes David Feliciano in his column, In Closing.
